

Human Rights Education in Philippine Schools is the result of a research project commissioned by the Asia-Pacific Human Rights Information Center (HURIGHTS OSAKA) to the Center for Research and Development in Education (CREDE) of the Philippine Normal University, Manila, Philippines.

The project is mainly designed to provide an independent and critical review of the existing state of human rights education in school programs in several Asian Countries by analyzing how the national education policy structure supports human rights education, and what impact is there in terms of human rights awareness of students. It covers four countries (India, Japan, Sri Lanka and the Philippines) with programs on human rights education existing for a significant period of time.
